vity, it is not feasible to make an estimate of the extent of gold being smuggled into the country. The increase in the quantity and value of seizures of gold during the years '1985 and 1986 need not indicate an increase in smuggling. This is mainly due to more effective preventive operations. The magnitude of smuggling of gold into the country is determined largely by:—

(i) High domestic demand due to social customs;

(ii) Demand for hoarding purposes as a security and hedge against inflation;

(iii) Negligible production and supplies;

(iv) Profitability due to wide differential between low international price and rising domestic prices.

The anti-smuggling drive throughout the country has been intensified. The anti-smuggling machinery throughout the country, particularly at vulnerable points along the coastline and the land borders and at the international airports and seaports, has been geared up to check smuggling. Sophisticated anti-smuggling equipment, such as metal detectors and X-ray machines are being utilised for detection of gold concealed on the person of passengers and in their baggage. On the basis of information, vessels, vehicles and aircrafts are searched for concealed gold. Close coordination is maintained with all the ageneies concerned in the prevention and detection of smuggling into the country.
